Sierra Nevada High Route

Sierra Nevada is the second highest mountain range in Western Europe after the Alps. Aligned along 50 kilometers from southwest to northeast, fifteen mountains rise more than three thousand meters high, culminating in the 3482 meters of the Mulhacén peak, the highest mountain in the Iberian Peninsula.

This long chain of peaks might be covered in a fantastic four days trekking trip, following an itinerary as close as possible to the highest heights of this massif, and reaching its fifteen highest summits. Without being a technically complex route, it will be essential to have excellent fit and mountaineering experience. All this to enjoy the most demanding high mountain traverse in southern Europe.
